Hidden Shoal Recordings » Slow Dancing Society Pre-Release

Perth, Western Australia, November 6th, 2006.
The Australian digital music label, Hidden Shoal Recordings, today pre-released the new album by U.S. ambient artist Slow Dancing Society, "The Sound Of Lights When Dim".

"The Sound of Lights When Dim" is a sumptuous unfolding ride towards a fading horizon. The album has all the qualities of an Eno ambient classic whilst forging it's own musical and emotional path.

The album was conceived in Los Angeles, 2003 and over the last three years has seen a number of mutations and developments. The projects shifting ground over that period has managed to infuse a wonderful timeless quality to the work.

As with Brian Eno's finest moments and David Sylvian's ambient explorations, this work manages to dissolve its temporal markers and speak about moments removed from time. It talks to the delicious flaws of memory and feeling whilst never sullyng itself with literality or simple documentation.

Drew Sullivan, aka Slow Dancing Society is a Washington based producer and musician whose work is currently featured in the Todd Kauffman film, "The Key". He has performed live in Los Angeles and Washington, developing a wonderful reputation for producing deep immersive atmospheres within the live context.

"The Sound of Lights When Dim" is now available in the HSR Store and will see its official release in December where it will be available in Itunes, eMusic and Sony Connect stores around the world.
